As the New York City Marathon looms (Sept. 29), here's a list of recommendations: Runners in training should eat plenty of carbs. They're necessary for speed and endurance and should be given in the form of sweets and breads like bagels and breadsticks. Traffic and mass transit aren't much of a challenge. Lots of runners take the subway and bus, and many others run the route before work. Don't be in a hurry to get your hands on a high-end GPS watch. They can be expensive, and you don't want to pay good money to find that after 19 miles you aren't exactly where you think you are. Find a pacer if you can. Talk to your local running club, or try to find a pace group online. Pacing is a good way to run into a friend or find a long-distance running buddy, as long as it's someone you trust. Buy an old running watch. I use a watch from the early '90s that I bought for $10.00 on Amazon. Timex, anyone? It's also cheap to replace when your battery fails. No word on the air quality, but the expected high temperatures and humidity should be perfect for those who like to train in the heat (very few, I suspect). --- Register now for New York City Marathon's Live & Virtual Challenge: Take in a live running experience from the race course or live stream a race from your computer, tablet or phone. Make sure to watch the coverage of the 100th anniversary race on NBC, from 8:00 to 11:00 a.m. ET / 5:00 to 8:00 a.m. PT. Coverage on NBC will include a preview of this year's women's course, including a detailed look at the iconic route from the Staten Island Ferry Terminal. --- Check out NBC's other stories about the race: Watch a Facebook Live on the men's course of the New York City Marathon from 2 to 5 a.m. ET on Sept. 24, 2013.
